

BIG EXPENSE TO MOVE STONE PIER OF R. R. VIADUCT

That it will cost $60,000 to remove the stone pier in the railroad viaduct at Congress street and straighten the street by putting lighter steel girders further to the north, was what Attorney Nathan Sterling of New York, representing the New Haven road, told the members of the board of appeals of benefits and damages last night. Attorney Sterling said that any plan which would not call for the building of a new bridge would be acceptable to the railroad, but he thought a new bridge would be necessary if the pier were removed. It has been suggested that a new span of cantilever construction be placed at Congress street. Attorney Sterling said such a span would cost much more than the road was able to spend at this time.

At the hearing on the proposed extension of West Liberty street, Fred D. Ives who owns property in Lafayette street, said he would lose $10,000 above any benefits which might result. Clerk Steiner of the board called the attention of the members to the fact that Mr. Ives' property was assessed for but $5,400, and that he had listed it with the tax assessors as worth $4,100.

William T. Mullins told the board that his property would be damaged $8,400. Charles Cole said his property at Lafayette street and Liberty street would not be benefited by the proposed extension. Frederick Cooper said he would obtain no benefits but he offered to give $200 to help defray the expenses of the proposed extension. His property would not be made any more valuable by the proposed extension.

Attorney Fred B. Keeler and Attorney Frederick A. Bartlett representing the Terry estate said that the proposed widening of Congress street on the north from Housatonic avenue to Main street would damage that property to the amount of at least $15,000. Attorney Bartlett also appeared for Charles Berger who owns a building in Main street. Attorney Hugh J. Levey for Abbie McCarthy who owns the building on the northeast corner of Main and Congress streets opposed the proposed widening. He said the property of his client was worth $35,000 and it would be practically destroyed if the widening was carried out. He said the property now earned a good income for the owner and they did not want to dispose of it. Attorney John J. Cullinan appeared for John Farrell who conducts a saloon in the building Mr. Farrell's losses on the widening of Congress street would be $30,000 but he has the privilege of rehewing it.

SCORE OF BRIDGEPORTERS WERE AT SCENE OF LEE'S SURRENDER

Members of Elias Howe Post of G. A. R. Hear of Ending of War While in Vicinity of Appomattox Village—Veteran Tells Story of Event.

More than a score of the members of Elias Howe Post, No. 3, G. A. R., were in Appomattox village vicinity when General Lee surrendered 50 years ago. Yesterday flags were flying from the homes of many of those who with rifles in their hands, but for three long years faced exposure, hardship and sudden death in an effort to end the war. How the news that at last the gallant Confederates had quit fighting was received in the Union lines is best illustrated by the story of Thomas Flint, of this city, formerly a private in Company B, 88th Massachusetts Vols.

"We were thirteen miles from the village of Appomattox," said Mr. Flint, "when an orderly came riding down the line and shouting 'It's all over, boys. We win. Lee has surrendered.' 'I would have told you that was called that fellow. We had been hearing that story so often that it had become a chestnut. But later came a lieutenant. He was a fine looking black haired fellow, with a big red silk handkerchief around his neck and sitting his horse like he knew how. We listened to that fellow. He said 'Boys, we've got them at last. Old Master Robert has quit. The war is over.' Then we cheered. 'Of course we were a long way from Appomattox. I didn't see General Lee or I didn't see General Lee that morning. There are men in this post who were only privates in that army, but if you will listen to them they will make you think that they advised General Grant what to do that day.'"

Probably the men in Bridgeport who were closest to the Lee house where the surrender took place were Russell Glenn, retired member of the police department and former truant officer, and Lieutenant Frank A. King, who is now night watchman for some of the stores on Main street. King was a courier to General Geo. B. Meade.

On the morning of the surrender he carried a dispatch that announcing to General Sheridan that a flag of truce had been sent in from the Confederate lines and that hostilities had been suspended for the time being. John Neff, private in the 10th Pennsylvania Vols., and Joseph Tyler, a private in the 10th Connecticut, also were also in the village of Appomattox when the surrender took place. It is a peculiar coincidence that Mr. McLean's house was located on the battlefield of Bull Run, where the Civil war began and directly in the line of fire, so that shells from the light artillery tore through the house. In an effort to escape the scene of action he moved his family to the house at Appomattox, Va., more than 200 miles from where the opening battle of the war was fought. There, through the strange trick of circumstances, his home was fated to be the scene of the meeting of the two of the greatest American soldiers and by whom the bloodiest struggle ever waged on the American continent was ended.

In another column of The Farmer today will be found the story of how the news of Lee's surrender was received in this city on April 10, the day following the event. News traveled slowly in those days. There were many young men from Bridgeport, Stratford and Fairfield in the Union army and it was not until the news of the surrender should have been received here and in this vicinity with great joy. There were thousands of men in the army who were charged and immediately arrangements were made for the reception of the troops who were soon to come home.

Today many members of the Grand Army had their flags over their homes and tonight every Grand Army post in the country that has not already had services will have a "campfire" in commemoration of the end of the war. All through the South members of the United Confederate veterans will gather at their camp rooms and give a silent salute to "Marse Robert."

BRIDGEPORT IN NEED OF 3,000 HOMES AT ONCE

"The Water and Gas companies have asked for an increase of capital stock at the present session of the legislature because we are anticipating an enormous growth of the city in order to meet the demands from that growth it will be necessary to finance our construction work on a very large basis. We have watched the recent development carefully and believe that Bridgeport will be the largest city in the state within a very short period; certainly it is the most rapidly growing city in the Union and in my judgment will have a population of 200,000 in six years. 'The people of Bridgeport do not seem to comprehend what has happened. The moves which have been made in the last month, and others which are in sight, will bring to us within a year from 8,000 to 10,000 new employees representing 30,000 people and demanding at least three thousand new two-family houses. This means a tremendous tax upon public service corporations and they must be alive to these needs or the growth of the city will smother them. The city itself will have to raise money by bonding, or otherwise, to a very enormous extent, if it responds to what is in store for its people. It means a development involving new bridges which is beyond any calculation yet made in any of the plans presented, an enormous increase in the facilities of water, gas and electricity and an order of magnitude of demands for schools and the welfare facilities of hospitals, charitable organizations, including an absolute need of the development of the good housing commission and the work it has started. It also means a tremendous increase in the grand list running into the millions of dollars. 'I have always been optimistic of Bridgeport's ultimate development and even in the midst of the great cloud, which hovers over the world due to the war in Europe, there is a very reason why we should be optimistic of Bridgeport's future. Bridgeport is a city of diversified interests. We manufacture almost everything. The tremendous impetus which the city has been given during the last month, by the addition of the new factories which are to locate here, will be made commonplace by the coming of the old established institutions as soon as peace is declared. The world's markets will be open and Bridgeport will do its share in furnishing the world and in my judgment, a great many of the new factories will be made in Bridgeport. My name is not Colonel Sellers, but I have been a student of conditions for some years and I give the people of Bridgeport a warning that if they are going to respond to the greatest opportunity ever had in the United States, they must look alive to the real situation, do away with side issues and their petty differences and get together and take full advantage of the opportunities which will soon make Bridgeport the greatest city in the state, one of the principal municipalities of New England and a factor of national importance and known throughout the world."

"The location of the bridge is that wanted by the people and for which they voted. The plan as proposed by the City Plan commission would cost several hundred thousand dollars more than the bond issue allows. The commission has acted according to what it thinks is the best interest of the city and disgruntled persons ought to come forward and render public service themselves before they criticize."

"Why should members of the University club question the action of the bridge commission?" asked the commissioner. "The commission has acted in good faith after carefully considering all plans offered and the prospect of getting a new bridge in the shortest possible time. It is easy enough to get a crowd of men to get together around a banquet table and vote resolutions to ask people to do this or that but how many members of this same club are sacrificing any of their own time and money in the public service?"

"The location of the bridge is that wanted by the people and for which they voted. The plan as proposed by the City Plan commission would cost several hundred thousand dollars more than the bond issue allows. The commission has acted according to what it thinks is the best interest of the city and disgruntled persons ought to come forward and render public service themselves before they criticize."

PEDDLER'S HORSE IS SHOT AFTER STREET FALL

Samuel Cohen, a peddler, residing at 92 Calhoun avenue, is today minus one horse, shot yesterday by order of the Animal Rescue league, a group of which society was called yesterday to Olive street and Iranian avenue where a horse had been "down" for nearly two hours. Although the owner protested that the animal was not seriously ill, Dr. C. E. C. Adams, a local veterinary surgeon, summoned to decide upon the situation, declared that the animal should at once be despatched. The owner protested against the shooting being done on the street, and with the aid of the Animal Rescue league's ambulance the horse was taken to Cohen's stables where it was killed.

The English people may give up liquor on account of the war, but the only thing that ever makes the American people do so is inability to get treated any further at the saloons.

Summary OF THE War News

The official war reports of today indicate that the fighting in France which started on Monday with a French attack between the Meuse and Moselle rivers has developed into a desperate struggle along a considerable portion of the western front. The statement from the German army headquarters mentions one after another, a series of onslaughts by the allies, and says that the battle between rivers is proceeding with undiminished violence. Although at times the French succeeded in gaining a foothold on German positions, it would appear from the Berlin statement that the advantage of importance has been obtained.

The Paris statement adds nothing to the previous claims of desperate bayonet fighting at Les Eparges, capture of which by the French was announced yesterday. In the east no changes are recorded. Berlin war office says that the Russians accomplished nothing by attacks in the north.

Austria is reported to have abandoned her campaign against Serbia, bringing to a close the offensive operations which were the immediate cause of the general European conflict. Despatches from Switzerland say that Austria has given up the plan for new attack on Serbia for the sake of sending additional troops to the Italian frontier. It is also reported from the same source that the decision has been reached at Vienna to sound Russia as to peace terms.

The official organ of the Vatican, however, denies the report that Austria has requested the assistance of the Pope in such negotiations.

Russia is said to have made important captures of guns and war munitions in the Carpathians. What is reported as information from the Austrian general staff is that in the battle along the Dukla Epres front the Russians lost 26,000 men. Popular agitation in Italy concerning the attitude of the government has increased to a point which has necessitated energetic action by the authorities to prevent disorders. The factions for and against war have managed to keep the peace for tomorrow which the leaders say will be held in spite of a police prohibition.

A French sailing from London for New York, has been sunk by a German submarine off the Isle of Wight. The Germans allowed the crew 24 minutes in which to leave the vessel.

Official VIEWS OF World's War FRENCH

Paris, April 10.—The French war office this afternoon gave out an official announcement reading as follows: "There is nothing to add today to the official communication of last night. The French war office has received supplementary reports relating that the two attacks which yesterday made us masters of the last German positions at Les Eparges, led to desperate bayonet fighting."

GERMAN

Berlin, April 10.—The German war office, under date of April 10, has given out a report on the progress of hostilities which reads as follows:

"Engagements between the Meuse and the Moselle continued yesterday with undiminished violence."

"No engagement yet has taken place on the enormous increased front and Cossauville, which the French report as having been taken by them. Both these places are situated far in front of the German lines."

"Between the river Orne and the heights of the Meuse the French were severely defeated. All the French attacks from the heights of Combres, north of St. Mihiel and on the Alilly-Apremont front near Eligny have been repulsed. No French in consequence of former heavy French losses, the fighting yesterday was less violent."

"Further attacks on the Remenauville front and the forest of Lepretre and the attempt to conquer Bezaux-Grand, southwest of Chateau Salines, resulted in failure."

"Five Belgian officers and 122 soldiers, officers and privates, were taken prisoners by us, together with seven machine guns."

"In the Vosges there has been no change. Russian attacks to the east and south of Kalvaryia have been repulsed with heavy losses to the Russians. Otherwise the situation on the eastern front shows no change."

Vatican Denies Peace Plan.

Rome, April 10.—Official denial of the report that Austria has asked the good offices of the Holy See to obtain peace proposals is printed in the Osservatore Romano, the organ of the Vatican.

Weaver aluminum and some special prices.

Weaver aluminum is especially good for use on gas and oil stoves. It withstands the great heat, such stoves so quickly generate, better than any other sort of cooking ware.

To demonstrate plainly its abilities, we've arranged a special exhibit for next week. Weaver will be put to tests that ordinary cooking ware could never go through satisfactorily.

Think of a metal saucepan that is not injured by having things actually burned in it! Think of a kettle in which milk may be boiled with no danger of that milk being burned! That is Weaver aluminum.

With this special demonstration, some Weaver utensils at special price:

Prof. Lounsbury, Spelling Reform Advocate, is Dead

New Haven, April 10.—Thomas R. Lounsbury, professor of English at Yale university, died suddenly at 10:35 o'clock last night in the home of the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, secretary of Yale university. He was 77 years old, and very active up to the time of his death. Prof. Lounsbury had been discussing with Dr. Stokes on some writings on Tennyson which he had in his mind when stricken with asthma and heart trouble, from which he had been suffering. Dr. Samuel N. Hammond was summoned, but nothing could be done for the professor, who died without regaining consciousness soon after the arrival of his son, Walter W. Lounsbury.

Prof. Lounsbury was eminent among the professors and scholars connected with the university. He was born in Ovid, N. Y., January 1, 1838, and was graduated from Yale in 1859, taking a master of arts degree in 1877. He took doctor of law degrees from Yale in 1892, Harvard the following year, Aberdeen in 1896 and other degrees from Princeton and Lafayette. His wife, who was Miss Jennie P. Fodwell of Kendal, N. Y., and his son survive him. Mrs. Lounsbury is on her way North. The professor taught at Yale practically from his graduation to 1906, when he retired. Among his many writings are a biographical sketch of Charles Dudley Warner, whose works he edited; a book of verse, and works on simplified spelling. Some years ago he brought out a simplified spelling book. He was an intimate friend of President Roosevelt, who indorsed his simplified spelling ideas.
